It was a different year full of constant change and adjustments with the Covid-19 restrictions. However, the library, with the support of its patrons, successfully twisted and turned with all the changes to make the year a success. Staff adjusted by some working remotely for a few short weeks, and by creating virtual programming via Facebook and starting the library's YouTube channel. I'm happy to say the library was only closed three months out of the year; not a good thing to cheer; but we managed to open to the public in June and stay open with the help of patrons.

Following all the rules and restrictions in place without noticeable complaint to staff, patrons went with the flow and did what they needed to do to keep their library open. Not only were we able to provide in-library access and computer use to patrons, but we held limited in-person programming to again have fun activities at the library. This working together is what makes our library what it is: a fun, always evolving, important asset to the community. This last year was made possible by staff and patrons working together; the best partnership for the library.
